Women Philosophers Of The Early Modern Period

Synopsis

An important selection from the largely unknown writings of women philosophers of the early modern period. Each selection is prefaced by a headnote giving a biographical account of its author and setting the piece in historical context. Atherton's Introduction provides a solid framework for assessing these works and their place in modern philosophy.

Customer Reviews

A very useful collection, welcome both for the intrinsic merit and historical significance of the ideas and arguments the volume contains, and for its pedagogical potential. --Peter Loftson, Canadian Philosophical Reviews

Worth the money

Needed for school. Need I say more.

A required book for PHIL 1301 and purchased for a good price.

Great

The book was in good shape with all its pages. Thanks Required text for a college course. Great book. Smooth, fast purchase and receipt of shipment.

Margaret Atherton has written and compiled an excellent introduction to the work of a number of women philosophers of the 17th and 18th centuries. The book contains a biographical introduction, followed with selections from one of the works of seven women philosophers: Princess Elisabeth of Bohemia, Margaret Cavendish, Anne Viscountess Conway, Damaria Cudworth (Lady Masham), Mary Astell, Catherine Trotter Cockburn, and Lady Mary Shepherd. Atherton's own comments are frequently insightful: "Perhaps it is also unusual that only one of these women, Catherine Trotter Cockburn, was the mother of a large family. The others were either childless or had only one child." The book contains numerous historical "nuggets," as well. For example, Atherton notes that "Descartes' "Passions of the Soul" is said to derive from his conversations with Elisabeth (of Bohemia), and he thought sufficiently well of her to dedicate his magnum opus, Principles of Philosophy, to her." She notes that Leibniz also wrote that "My philosophical views approach somewhat closely those of the late Countess of Conway." This is an excellent selection and introduction to this group of women philosophers.
